HARRY S TRUMAN STATE OFFICE BUILDING
Jefferson City, Missouri

Inside the eight-floor Harry S Truman State Office Building in Jefferson City, business is as usual. Every Monday through Friday, approximately 2,900 state employees are busy promoting Missouri, establishing utility rates, helping new and small businesses, purchasing equipment and services, processing most every type of state tax return in existence and conducting many other duties.

The inhabitants of this sizable state office building have often been compared to a small community contained within one city block. The 752,000 square-foot office building also has been dubbed the financial hub of state government because of two of its occupants. The Office of the State Treasurer is the custodian of approximately $7.5 billion in state funds and the Department of Revenue is the central collection agency for all state revenue.

The idea of consolidating state offices in Jefferson City became a reality when the Missouri General Assembly in 1978 appropriated approximately $55 million to buy the land and construct the office building.

Designed by Patty Berkebille Nelson Duncan Monroe Lefebvre of Kansas City, the Truman Building's state-of-the-art interior features a central atrium that is 45 feet wide and 220 feet long. The eight-story atrium separates the structure into two components while creating a dramatic front entrance.

The building has 677,694 square feet of usable office space. The majority of the office walls, as well as the flooring, is constructed of movable sections that can be easily and affordably reconfigured as office needs change.

On September 29, 1980, under the direction of the general contractor, McCarthy Brothers Construction Company of St. Louis, the first spade of earth was turned to begin excavation for the office structure. Construction, which involved approximately 150 laborers per day, was completed in February of 1984. The Harry S Truman State Office Building was completely occupied with 2,300 employees of 69 divisions of seven state offices in March of 1984.

Today, the largest state office building in Missouri houses the offices of three elected officials and four state departments. Named after our 33rd president, the Harry S Truman State Office Building stands as a symbol of state government's efforts to provide efficient and effective services for all Missourians.
